

Rain On the Roof

Key Points

- It is a poem that tells us about the poet's sweet memories of his childhood.
- At night, there are dark clouds that cover the sky and consequently all the stars become invisible.
- He says that the darkness is making him sad and reflective, and the rain also seems to mirror his emotions as it looks like tears falling softly from human eyes.
- The poet describes how the raindrops make the loudest sound as they fall on the shingles of the roof.
- As he listens to the soft and continuous falling of the raindrops, all his memories are coming back to him, but they are not discrete and separated from each other.
- It rains gently and the poet lies on his cozy bed listening to the patter of soft rain on the roof.
- He enjoys the sound, the melody of nature. Every tinkle on the roof echoes in his heart. The single memory that comes to him, is that of his mother.
- He pictures the face of his mother as it used to look at him as she tucked him in bed.
- He recalls how his mother used to tell him stories.
- These memories are evoked as he listens to the repetitive rhythm of the raindrops as they are falling on his roof.
- He continues enjoying the patter of rain on the roof.
- He says that the Nature's music is restrained, and it also quietens the environment around it.
